Juneau 2008 Organizational Culture Report

The questionnaire measures seven critical areas of an organization's culture: Teamwork, Morale, Information Flow, Employee Involvement, Supervision, Meetings, and Customer Service. The overall culture score is the average of these seven dimensions.

Teamwork: The teamwork dimension assesses the extent to which employees perceive their work group operating as a team where trust is high and people are treated in a fair and consistent manner. It also examines the extent to which management and employees are seen to have a productive working relationship. Dimensions include listening to each other, constructively confronting problems together, and communicating in a direct and honest manner. This score is made up of 5 questions.

Morale: The morale dimension taps the extent to which employees feel motivated to be efficient and productive, and to put out their best efforts. It also discovers the extent to which employees feel respected by people in their work group and the rest of the organization. This score contains 5 questions.

Information Flow: The information flow dimension examines whether employees get enough information to be efficient and productive, if they know why changes are made, and the extent to which they know what's happening in work sections outside of their own. This score is made up of 4 questions.

Employee Involvement: The employee involvement dimension discovers if employees feel they have a say in decisions that affect their work, if they perceive that their ideas are asked for and valued. It also finds out if employees feel that their input counts and is acted upon. This score is made up of 4 questions.

Supervision: The supervision dimension measures several critical aspects of supervision. Are job requirements made clear? How well do supervisors listen? Do supervisors let employees know when they've done a good job and offer criticism in a positive manner? How well does a supervisor delegate responsibility? This score contains 4 questions.

Meetings: This score measures the effectiveness and efficiency of meetings. Do decisions made at meetings get put into action? Does everyone take part in discussions at meetings and do those discussions stay on track? Is meeting time viewed as time well spent? This score contains 4 questions.

Customer Service: Customer Service measures the extent to which employees perceive their group working to continuously improve service to external customers. It also discovers if coworkers are treating each other as valued customers. This score contains 5 questions.

How the scores are computed: First, an employee's score is computed as the average of his/her answers to the relevant questions in a culture area. Then the department's score for each culture area is computed as the average score of all the employees in a department.

What the numbers mean: To interpret your scores, it is important to consider two numbers: the mean score and the standard deviation. The mean score gives you an indication of how employees, on average, rated an item, the standard deviation gives an idea of how much employees agree or disagree with each other on their ratings. Approximately 60% of scores will be between one standard deviation of the average score. A low standard deviation (generally less than .75) indicates most people agreed with each other on their ratings. A high standard deviation (greater than .75) indicates some amount of disagreement among employees, with some employees who see things either a lot more positively or negatively than most other people in a department. In general, the smaller the standard deviation, the more agreement, and conversely, the larger the standard deviation, the more disagreement.

Interpreting Mean score: These scores can range from a low of 1.0 to a high of 5.0. In general, low scores indicate poor functioning, higher scores better functioning. To interpret a mean score, see below.

4.0 – 5	Excellent, strong performance
3.5 – 3.9	Good performance – general satisfaction
3.0 – 3.49	Adequate performance
2.0 – 2.9	Needs significant improvement
1.0 – 1.99	Serious problems

Part 3: “Newer” Employees vs. “Long-Term” Employees

In 2008, the survey included a question asking people if they had taken the survey in 2002. Of the 317 people who completed the survey, 288 answered this question: 195 “long-term” employees and 93 “newer” employees. The scores for 2008 were analyzed to determine whether the newer employees differed from the long-term employees. Statistically significant differences are noted below. It is important to note, however, that while some of the differences may be statistically significant, the difference is small enough to not necessarily be meaningfully different.
